LIMAY RIVER Miguel

Undoubtedly one of the richest fishing resources in Northern Patagonia, the Middle Limay River presents unparalleled fly-fishing opportunities for anglers from around the globe.

As an exceptional tail-water fishery, it originates from the Pichi Picun Leufu Dam, ensuring a steady flow, temperature, and clarity throughout the year. Meandering 50 miles through the semi-arid, high Patagonian steppe, it culminates in the vast, fertile lake formed by the El Chocon Dam.

These distinctive characteristics render the Middle Limay truly remarkable. Its status as a tail-water fishery fosters abundant underwater life and daily hatches, creating optimal conditions for robust populations of resident Browns and Rainbows that eagerly rise to surface dries. Moreover, its convergence with the expansive, fertile lake provides the opportunity to pursue mammoth migratory Brown Trout, ascending the river during the season for spawning. This unique combination promises an exhilarating blend of action and excitement. Whether you prefer casting surface dries all day or targeting massive fish with weighted streamers, the Middle Limay offers an array of angling experiences.

With its vast expanse comprising numerous channels, deep runs, cliff-side pools, and pocket water, the Middle Limay River delivers some of the most diverse, challenging, and rewarding fly fishing encounters in Patagonia today.

For those seeking the epitome of Patagonian fly fishing experiences, a journey to the Middle Limay River promises an unforgettable adventure.
